Training Must Build Judgment, Discipline, and Humility--Not Just Skill

We strongly urge our wear and carry customers to train frequently. Training does not simply involve learning how to shoot; it involves developing into an individual with the necessary judgment, discipline and humility to assume this immense responsibility safely, legally and ethically.

We believe that understanding the following principles is absolutely critical when carrying a firearm in public for self-defense:

- ◆ To carry a firearm is a tremendous burden of responsibility.
- ◇ To do it safely, legally, and ethically requires maturity, discipline, and accountability; it is not enough to be technically skilled.

- ◆ Deliberate training builds true confidence in your ability to perform.
- ◇ Confidence is built as you face stress, build competency, and demonstrate to yourself your ability to perform in high-pressure situations.

- ◆ The most valuable skill you will ever have is the ability to exercise good judgment.
- ◇ Your training should teach you when to act and when not to act, and how to make good judgments while under pressure. Your firearm is not your greatest asset, your judgment is.

- ◆ Mastery is developed with a sense of calm, quiet confidence.
- ◇ Mastery shows a level of preparation, humility, and control over your actions, as opposed to being controlled by your ego or showmanship.
